Jean and John, twin boy and girl of 12 years, are kept indoors by a snowstorm just before Christmas. Casting about in their minds for amusement, goodwill fairies come to their aid. Simultaneously they think of color books sent by an uncle; and as they color the pictures of our beloved Christmas characters, they, by the aid of the fairies, become alive on the stage. The sprightly songs which intersperse the pictures, will be sung by a choir of Juniors and Intermediates.

The Way To National Recovery

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

Recent polls among the American people have demonstrated an increasing demand for curtailment of reckless expenditures of public funds.

This doesn't mean that the people want to see less money in circulation. It means, instead, that they want to see more money more widely distributed among all our citizens.

For what the people realize is that the more government disturbs public confidence through political extravagance, the more it discourages enterprise on the part of its citizens.

And they realize further that in marked contrast to government hand-outs, expenditure by private enterprise is productive. It creates new goods, new jobs, new needs—and the means to supply those needs.

For productive enterprise benefits all the people, rather than a few. By increasing employment, it spreads income to everyone, rather than to the beneficiaries of limited but powerful pressure groups. It means more homes, larger payrolls, higher standards of living.

Our history demonstrates this. Since America first became a nation the greatest factor in her prosperity has been productive enterprise, not public spending. It was her farms, her factories, her commerce, her workers—not her political theorists and spenders—that made America great.

When the new Congress meets, this demand for encouragement rather than curtailment of the productive capacities of the American people must be one of its first considerations.

And on how Congress responds to that demand will depend our progress toward the coveted goals of national recovery and of increased employment and greater happiness for all our people.

Tinley Girl Figures In Near Fatal Crash

Miss Laura Steele of Tinley Park figured in a serious auto accident last Saturday morning, but was fortunate to escape with only minor injuries.

Miss Steele, living on a rural route on 167th street, Oak Forest was on her way to work in the Vogt department store in Tinley Park. At Cicero avenue she stopped for the stop sign. A big truck also pulled alongside and stopped, then started up to cross Cicero. Miss Steele also started to cross when suddenly another car loomed up in front of her. She could not stop quick enough to avoid a collision and both cars came together with such force that it overturned both cars and made them into tangled masses of steel, but luckily the four persons in the cars escaped serious injury.

The other car involved in the collision was driven by Paul Whittington, 29, a WPA time keeper of 7 W. Main st., Chicago Heights. With Whittington in his car were his wife, Jane, 24, and Mrs. Inda Black, 31, of the same address.

Miss Steele was able to go to her home unassisted. The other three were taken in a baking powder truck to the St. James hospital in Chicago Heights, where their injuries were said to be not serious.

Wrestling Match December 22nd

Walter Shaughnessy announced today that he has signed Big Jim McMillan, former Notre Dame football star, Chicago Bear football star and nationally known professional wrestler, to appear in his Thursday night wrestling show at the Chamber of Commerce arena, Joliet.

McMillan's opponent will be either Frederick Von Schacht, Ruffy Silverstein or Ignatio Martinez. This match will be the feature event of a four-bout card of all-star wrestlers for the Christmas show.

Big Jim McMillan is the tops in the wrestling profession. He has had the championship within his grasp more than any wrestler in the business. He had Everett Marshall practically out on his feet in Detroit, Michigan, when Marshall punched him and Jim lost his head and threw the champion out into the audience and was disqualified. He wrestled Jim Londos in Madison Square Gardens before the largest house ever seen at a wrestling match. He had Londos practically whipped and he relaxed just for a moment and that moment lost him the match. Nagurski never would meet McMillan so claims Jim and now since Londos has won the title back Mac is on his trail for another chance at the title. Jim is on his way to a fast comeback and going to brush aside anyone and everyone in his path. This bout Thursday night is going to take care of one of the obstacles.

There has been 200 additional bleacher seats installed in the 44c section that are just ten feet away from the ring and provides a beautiful view of the battles. Other seats are bleachers and reserved. For the early comers or those that order in advance there are a few reserved seats on sale at the Hollywood Luncheonette, John McCarthy's and at John McGuire's Jewelry store in Joliet.

You Can't Spend It Twice

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

The next Budget Message to Congress will again be written in Red Ink.

This forecast from informed sources at Washington comes, of course, as no surprise to the American people. The habit of reckless spending by government during the past few years has made deficits running into the billions inescapable.

But, as recent events have demonstrated, it has not succeeded in making such deficits popular. Clearly and emphatically the people have shown their understanding and resentment of the fact that it is they who must foot the bills.

For the National Debt, like the National Debt, adds, in the end, to the great burden of taxes which only the people can pay.

And, as the people realize, every dollar commandeered for taxes, whether directly or indirectly, means a dollar taken out of their earnings and savings.

They realize also that they cannot spend those earnings twice. The dollar taken for taxes is gone—it cannot be spent again for food, or clothes, or rent, or enjoyment by the man or the woman who toiled for it.

Instead it is spent by office-holders and politicians.

The workers and earners of America understand that government must look to them for support. But they understand, too, that when the money they contribute to this support is squandered, not only they, but the nation as a whole, is hurt. For money spent by the workers to supply their needs creates new production and new employment, while money wasted by politicians helps only the politicians themselves.

Economy in government may prove a brake on the ambitions of bureaucrats—but it will also prove an accelerator to the progress and the well-being of America and all her people.

I had told Winter to call me at nine o'clock; but, tired as I was, I awoke at a quarter to eight, and after trying in vain to go back to sleep, I presently threw in my hand and began to get up.

My state of mind was uneasy. I could not reach my lady, because I had given her back the key of her suite. Yet, since I had her chemise, my shirt must be in her bedroom. If she found it, well and good. But if some servant found it . . .

In fact I need not have worried, for about ten minutes to nine a manservant came to my room, bearing a note and a parcel addressed to me. "From his lordship, sir," he said, and bowed himself out.

With starting eyes, I read the following words:

Mr. Exon,
I have the honor to return you the shirt which you dropped this morning on leaving my daughter's suite.
Perhaps you will make it convenient to leave the Castle at once.

Brief,
I remember that I stared at the paper as though it belonged to some dream. Then I sat down and put my head in my hands. And then I stood up again, because something had to be done.

As I made for the door, this was opened and Winter came into the room.

"Find Mr. Parish," I said: "and ask him to come here at once."

As it was, I was more than half dressed, and as I got into my jacket, the Englishman entered the room.

"Parish," I said, "how soon can I see her Grace?"

"Perhaps at ten, sir; but certainly not before that."

I glanced at my watch. The time was five minutes past nine.

"Very well, I must see the Count. I don't think he'll want to receive me, but if you can get hold of Bertram, perhaps you can bring it off."

"I'll manage it, sir," said Parish.

"Do you wish to see him at once?"

"Immediately."

"Then come with me, sir," said Parish. "I think I know where he is."

I thrust the note into my pocket and left the room.

The respect with which Parish was treated by the servants of Brief was very nearly as deep as that they were pleased to accord to the Duchess herself, and before two minutes had passed I was ushered unannounced into an elegant library.

As the door closed behind me—

"What does this mean?" said the Count, getting up to his feet.

I answered him slowly enough.

"It means," I said, "that we are to clear the air."

"I'll see about that," said the man, and made straight for the bell.

"I strongly advise you," I said, "not to try to have me removed."

If you do, you will force my hand; and so, Lord Ferdinand Virgil, cut your throat."

I saw the shaft go home. My use of his proper title hit him beneath the heart. If more revelations were coming, better that they should come whilst we were alone.

For all that, his eyes were burning . . . I was Richard Exon, and not the Duchess of Whelp.

As a servant answered his summons, he turned on his heel . . .

I watched him curiously.

There was a moment's silence.

Then—

"Your lordship rang?" said the servant.

The other spoke over his shoulder.

"Yes," he said thickly. "Has—has Mr. Percy returned?"

"Not yet, my lord."

"Desire him to come here the moment he enters the house."

"Very good, my lord," said the man, and made himself scarce.

As the door closed behind him—

"I do not think," I said, "that your son is going to come back."

Lord Ferdinand started about.

"My son? Is this blackmail?"

"It's not even bluff," said I, "but listen to me. I say I have reason to think that your son is not coming back. In view of what I told him last night, I think he will find it convenient to disappear."

The man was staring as though I were not of his world.

"Of what you told him? Who are you?"

"I'm a plain-clothes man," said I, "and I'm working for Scotland Yard."

I watched the blood flow out of the fellow's face . . .

At length he moistened his lips.

"Does the Duchess know this?" he said.

"No," said I. "Nobody knows—except the Austrian police."

I saw his mouth twitch at the word.

"Why—why the Austrian police?"

"Because I could not arrest you, without their leave. It's a question of extradition. You broke your bail in England twenty-two years ago."

"So you say. But—"

"You arranged your flight with your brother. He booked your passage for you and went alone to the station, taking your tickets and money, to see you off. And, when he was gone, you went—to Paris, instead. And the police mistook him for you . . . and sent him down."

That's twenty-two years ago, and he's done his time; but the charge against you remains, Lord Ferdinand Virgil, and I have been sent from England to . . . clear things up."

His fingers were plucking at his trousers, as those of a dying man will pluck at his sheets.

"What d'you mean—clear things up?"

"I'll tell you plainly," said I. "Because of the mistake that was made, another warrant must issue—as a matter of form. Before that warrant can issue, a further information has to be sworn. I am here to complete that information . . ."

"What—of—her—mother's—jewels?"

"This," said I. "Your son, Percy Virgil, stole them six weeks ago."

The fellow sat back in his chair, with a hand to his throat.

"You say that he's gone," he said.

"Both he and Elsa have gone. You see, I had instructions to give them their choice. That is sometimes done—if the injured party consents. It tends to avoid a scandal . . . I gave them both until dawn to be clear of Brief. And both have availed themselves of the chance which they had. Personally, I think they were wise; and I must confess that Elsa got back on me, for she packed a suitcase whilst I was engaged with your niece, and, when she went, it went with her . . . But that's by the way. In fact, this is all by the way, for I have so far said nothing of the most significant duty I did last night. I proved your brother's statement that he is the Count of Brief."

My words brought him up to his feet.

"I defy you," he mouthed. "It's a lie. He clawed at the air. 'There is no proof. Because some old doddering servant imagines vain things—'

"I am not a doddering servant and I have no memories. Yet I can prove the statement your brother makes. I was sent to see if I could prove it—I told you just now. I was sent to complete the information . . . upon which the warrant will issue, the day after I get back."

"Then prove it—prove it to me."

"With pleasure," said I. "The Lady Elizabeth Virgil is twenty-four. She is also the next in line. If you are the Count indeed, why have you never shown her the secret of Brief?"

Beside this, my other blows were so many flicks on the face. Before my eyes, Lord Ferdinand seemed to shrink; and he took a step back and then sideways, and put out a hand to find something on which he could lean.

"Listen to me," said I. He lifted his head. "Following your brother's directions, I found the way to the chamber eight hours ago. I took his daughter with me; and now she knows for herself the secret of Brief. Both of us, therefore, can swear that we have seen with our eyes what your brother said we should see . . . which means that, as I warned you, the information is very nearly complete."

"Though I heard no sound, I saw his lips frame the words."

"Very nearly."

"Very nearly, my lord. I have proved all your brother said, except one thing. He declared that if I were to ask you to tell me the secret of Brief, I should ask you in vain. And so . . . I ask you . . . to give me one single detail . . . of what your father revealed to his first-born son."

The man was trembling, and the sweat was out on his face.

"My b-brother," he quavered. "I think, if I could see him . . . I mean, without his statement—the warrant could not issue . . . and could not be—"

"He has made his statement," I said. "I have a copy upstairs."

"But my son is free. Statements were made in his case, but he has gone free. You said that you had instructions—"

"If the injured party consents."

"That's what I say," cried the man. "My brother would never subscribe to my — to proceedings against his father's son. I—I know he wouldn't, Exon. He wouldn't bear malice like that. And then the scandal . . . You said yourself that, rather than have a scandal—"

"Your son has gone," said I. "There can be no scandal there. Percy Elbert Virgil has disappeared."

"I—can—disappear."

He was panting now, and his eyes were half out of his head; yet he did what he could to wreathe his face into a smile, as though to do me pleasure and make me his friend.

"I can make no promise," I said, "until I have reported to those who sent me here. The case is too grave. But I'll tell you what I will do. If you will indorse the statement your brother has made, I'll take it to London tonight and recommend my people to let you go. To be honest, I don't think they'll do it, but—"

"How soon will you know?"

"On Friday. And on Sunday I shall be back—with or without the warrant for your arrest. This is upon condition that you indorse the statement to which I refer. Otherwise . . ."

"Yes?"

"In view of what you have admitted, I shall lay an information at Gabbie without delay. That will insure your detention until the demand for your extradition is made."

"But if I sign . . ."

"I can make no promise," I said. "I'll take the statement to London, and do what I can. You can take it or leave it, my lord. Sign, and I leave for London. Don't sign, and I leave for Gabbie—within the hour."

The fellow was biting his fingers, with his eyes on my face. The signing stuck in his gullet, as well it might. And then he threw in his hand . . .

"All right," he said. "Give me the statement . . . And you'll do your best for me, Exon. I'm—I'm not as young as I was."

I stepped to the bell and rang it.

"I want my . . . servant," I said . . .

With a shaking hand, Lord Ferdinand wiped his face; and then, still holding the table, he made his way round the oak and took his seat in a chair. When my summons was answered, one hand was shading his eyes and the other was toying with a paper that lay on a blotting-pad.

"I want my dispatch-case, Winter."

(TO BE CONTINUED)

"It Means," I Said, "That We Are to Clear the Air."

Thanks to what happened last night, it is very nearly complete."

"And then?"

"Then I shall return to London. And when the warrant is issued, I—shall—come—back."

There was a deathly silence.

Then the fellow turned round and made his way to a chair. I saw that he went heavily, as a man that is tired.

After a little he spoke.

"Why do you tell me these things?"

I took out the note he had written and held it up.

"Because of this letter. It seems that one of your people saw me leaving the Lady Elizabeth's suite. I had to convince you, therefore, that I was there on duty—and nothing else."

He let out a laugh at that, and the blood came into my face.

"If you doubt me," I said, "I can prove it. I'd a man outside her door the whole of the time."

"A man?" he cried, starting up.

"A man," said I. "Don't think I'm working alone. The man in question is playing the part of my servant: he's really a sergeant out of the C. I. D."

He quailed to the words, as a beast will quail to the whip. And then, as a beast will turn, he was showing fight.

"So you say," he snarled. "So you say. You prate of warrants and duty and—where's your badge?" His voice rose into a scream. "Show me your badge, you—"

"It's in my dispatch-case," I said. "—with other things. Would you like to know the duty which took me into her suite?"

"What then?"

I raised my eyebrows.

"I wanted a word with her maid—a girl of the name of Elsa . . . She's wanted for forgery in Bristol. Perhaps you didn't know that."

And there, when I stood to lose it, I won my game—with a shaft that Percy Virgil had set in my hand: for I saw in his father's eyes that he knew the truth about Elsa . . . and how could I have known it, unless I belonged to the police? "The evil that men do lives after them." The son had delivered the father into my hand.

Lord Ferdinand's head was shaking.

As he felt for his chair—

"I swear that I didn't. I swear—"

"You needn't worry. You won't be accused of that. But that isn't nearly all. I didn't go just to see Elsa: I wanted to see your niece. For one thing, I wanted to speak of her mother's jewels."

The fellow's head stopped shaking, and a hand went up to his mouth.

THE Town Improvement association was giving a sale to raise funds in a village where we were visiting. Our hostess had been to the sale early in the day and triumphantly displayed tiny cross-stitched pincushions purchased for Christmas gifts. They were so colorful and quaint that we went in search of some. We found them, but on every one was pinned a ticket "SOLD"! The lady had scored a hit who made those little three-inch pincushions as her contribution to the fancywork booth. They were kept for display even after they were sold.

The top of the cushion should be made on tapestry canvas or round thread art linen so that the threads may be counted easily in making the cross-stitches. This

Nature With Wisdom

Never did Nature say one thing and wisdom another.

One of the "lures" of the vamp is to express sympathy for the man who is sorry for himself.

After a modest man has been praised once for his modesty he is always fishing for more praise.

Belief is merely undiscoverable knowledge.

He's What He Makes Himself

No man is any good because his grandfather was. Nor can he blame his faults on his ancestors.

America is a nation of great cities. The metropolitan manner is diffused everywhere. There is even the hickiness of cities.

A bachelor may be merely a man who overvalues his personal liberty.

Something that people always discover: That fat men do have tempers.

Put It Into Action

Most of us have committed the Golden Rule to memory. Now let us commit it to life.

Sticklers for "usefully employing every minute" make themselves painful. Who wants to be always busy when his nature demands periods of relaxation and meditation?

Talent and Character

"Talent is formed in solitude and tranquility; character is the rush and shock of the world of men."—Goethe.

Smithsonian Aid Uncovers Traces of An Ancient Race of Indian Brewers

A prehistoric race of Indians who were the longest-headed people ever known on earth may also have been among the heaviest drinkers, according to discoveries in the Big Bend country of west Texas announced by the Smithsonian institution.

A tremendous cave hewed out of a limestone cliff and apparently used as a ceremonial brewery was excavated near Dryden, Texas, by Frank M. Setzler, head curator of the institution's department of anthropology.

While searching for dwelling sites of this mysterious people whose existence he discovered only seven years ago, Setzler located a cave, 60 feet wide by 40 feet deep, that gave evidence of extensive cooking operations.

Setzler and his assistants dug through nine feet of debris, uncovering arrowheads, scrapers, drills and stone knives, but a relative scarcity of the usual cooked animal bones and human skeletons. (The caves ordinarily were both dwelling and burial places.)

In front of the cave was an abnormally large accumulation of cooking stones. Furthermore, there were great deposits of ashes of sotol, the lily from which a highly potent alcoholic beverage was brewed.

In addition to the lack of animal bones and human skeletons—indicating that the cave was not used to house a family group—and the abundance of cooking stones and sotol ashes, evidence that the cave was a brewery came from a boulder with a hole drilled in it. The boulder may have been used as a brewing kettle.

Historical Inconsistency

History is anything but logical or consistent. The Pilgrim fathers, for instance, originally sailed for the Hudson and found themselves at the end of their voyage on the Massachusetts coast. Their destination was the Hudson, then Dutch, because they had come from Holland, whence they had sailed from England seeking religious freedom. But in Holland, life was so good that the little band of Pilgrims, seeing absorption imminent with so many intermarrying with the Dutch, determined to keep themselves separate by journeying to the New World.

Sentinels of Health

Don't Neglect Them!

Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure. When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel tired, nervous, all worn out. Frequent, scanty or burning passages may be further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance. The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Use Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Are endorsed the country over. Insist on Doan's. Sold at all drug stores.

Patriotism does not consist in waving banners, or wearing uniforms, or belonging to societies, or denouncing other lands, or waxing eloquent about God's own country. It consists rather in exemplifying in the twentieth century, the ancient truth that "righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people." —Dr. Mary E. Wooley.

Minstrel Show Wows Them

The much heralded "Petticoat Minstrel" of the Tinley Park PTA is now a matter of history, but it sure did pack the large Tinley Park auditorium for two nights last Friday and Saturday nights. Both nights were a sell out. The tuneful music and colorful costumes and settings were much enjoyed.

Much credit is due to the director and everyone who took part for their well presented production. The ladies demonstrated that they can and do put on minstrels as well as the men. The affair was a big success from an entertainment standpoint as well as financially.

Ted Rhinehart and membership chairman of the 8th District, was a visitor and congratulated us on our achievement. He said the 8th District led other Cook Co. Districts in membership and several other activities and that the county officials were praising the 8th district which is the County Posts south of Chicago in Cook County. Commander Baldwin said it was so easy to become 100 percent that now he is thinking up ways of getting new members. So any World War veteran, who does not belong, may expect to hear from the Post, if a whisper reaches us, that he is eligible for membership, which means that one must have an honorable discharge from some combat unit of the World War stating that he had been a member at sometime between the dates of April 6, 1917 and Nov. 11 1918.

Just remember veterans your $3 a year for dues is the same as an insurance for with it, we are able to secure better hospitalization for ourselves, more aid to our widows and our children. We have a bill up before Congress now to give our wives a pension in case of our demise and the little that your dues amount to, will be returned a hundred fold to her, so help put this bill thru by becoming a member of the American Legion, our National officers being able to point to the strength of our organization.

Chairman Robertson reported our skating party was well attended and it was the easiest successful Party we have put on so far. He further states that he is contemplating another dance but the date is not yet set, but all who are interested in "Shag" watch for further notices as the date will be out soon. We will assure you of a good time.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank all our relatives, neighbors and friends for kindness and sympathy shown us in our recent bereavement, also Rev. Martin Frick for his comforting words, and those who sent floral tributes and donated use of their cars.

Word comes from Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Wyman of San Antonio, Texas that they have bought a home there. The weather they report has been ideal, lots of sunshine and they are eating most of their noon day meals with the windows and doors wide open, although they have had a light killing frost.

TINLEY PARK

The regular open meeting of the Tinley Park Civic Club scheduled for the fourth Monday in December will be cancelled on account of Christmas being officially observed on that date. The program that would have been given then will be given on the fourth Monday in January. Speakers will be obtained early enough that ample time will be had to announce them in these columns.

The Club is putting forth its every effort to give this community something worth while both educational and entertaining. In order that we may succeed in this undertaking it will be necessary for you to attend. The expense is ours, the benefit is yours, so let's see every body on January 23rd at the Tinley Park school auditorium at 8 p. m.

Mr. F. E. Rice has just returned from a very interesting business trip to Indianapolis, Ind., at which place he represented the Available Moving and Storage Company at the Wholesale men's convention. During his stay in Indianapolis, Mr. Rice was a guest at the exclusive Columbia Club.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES
"God the Preserver of Man" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, December 11.

The Golden Text was, "Withhold not thou thy tender mercies from me, O Lord; let thy lovingkindness and thy truth continually preserve me" (Psalms 40:11).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Thy righteousness is like the great mountains; thy judgments are a great deep; O Lord, thou preservest man and beast" (Psalms 36:6).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "God is the Life, or intelligence, which forms and preserves the individuality and identity of animals as well as of men" (p. 550).

Hard Water Makes Life Harder

By HARRIET MORGAN FYLER

We couldn't be healthy or happy without water. We couldn't even live without it. But water however necessary, has one quality which often complicates existence beyond all reason. This is its tendency to dissolve some of all substances with which it comes in contact.

Let's be technical, for just a paragraph. No substance is absolutely insoluble in water. Thus water flowing over and thru soil absorbs into solution the compounds of calcium and magnesium from limestone, magnesite and gypsum deposits. Where this happens, the water becomes what we call "hard". The more of these deposits it absorbs the harder it gets. Those of us who live where the water is very hard know the results only too well. In other regions, either because we are used to them or they are not quite so noticeable, we may overlook those results. But they are there, nevertheless. Hard water in any degree is hard on soap, hard on clothes, hard on skin, hard on hair, hard on foods, hard on the pocket-book and hard on the temper.

How? Start with the familiar ring around the bathtub. As soon as we put soap into hard water, that soap reacts with the calcium and magnesium content of the water to form sticky, insoluble calcium and magnesium soaps, curds to us. We can see them floating around on the surface, clinging in a scummy layer to the sides of the basin or bathtub. There's our ring. These curds have no cleansing power—they merely cling tenaciously to whatever they touch.

Suppose its clothes we are washing. To make up for the soap wasted in curds, we have to use more soap, rub harder to get them clean. That's hard on clothes. Meanwhile those useless curds are clinging to the fabrics, be they silk, linen, cotton or wool. That's why clothes which have been washed, then laid away for a time, often have a rancid smell. When clothes washed in hard water are ironed, the clinging curds melt into the fibres of the fabric, making them stiff and brittle causing them to give and break much sooner. That's hard on the pocket-book. Finally, particularly when the cloth is ironed, the curd deposits cause discoloration. That is hard on our social standing. Have you ever heard of "tattle-tale-gray"?

Hard water is also the skin's worst enemy, responsible for much chapped, coarsened skin, scaliness and many cases of "dish-pa hands".

Soap curds moreover, cling to the skin as to all else, causing irritations, clogged and enlarged pores and other troubles. Beware of the hard water shampoo. Soap curds also cling to the hair, making it sticky and stringy with a slight musty odor. That is why so many beauty parlors use only softened water, or at least special rinses which reduce the bad effects of hard water.

Hard water is also a poor cook. With some foods it has no effect. With others it means the difference between tasty results, full-flavored, naturally colored, and a tough, unappetizing dish. Peas, beans and lentils for example, retain their original color and flavor if cooked in soft water. Canners learned this secret long ago. And many housewives habitually toss a pinch of baking soda into the water in which they are cooking vegetables. The soda acts as a partial softener.

But color and flavor are not the only considerations. The vegetable nutrients—the vitamins—are affected also. During a standard cooking period with hard water, about one-half the Vitamin C content is dissolved into the water. If the vegetable is cooked too slowly, as often happens when the water is hard, even more of the Vitamin C is lost.

Another astonishing fact is that the best tea and coffee are made with soft water—and with as much as one-third less tea and coffee!

When hard water is heated, it develops a new means of annoying. It deposits a cementlike scale on the surfaces between it and the heat. You've seen this scale in your teakettle. It also forms in boilers, hot water piping—iron, steel, copper or brass. Wherever found, it reduces heat transmission. It shortens the life of cooking utensils. It causes burned out heating coils and increases the cost of heating water. It chokes the water flow in piping, clogs the shower head. It causes frequent plumbing bills for keeping things in order and eventually it brings about the expensive necessity of tearing out and replacing old piping.

Because hard water soap curds cling just as tenaciously to the insides of pipes as to bathtubs and to sinks, they cause sluggish waste pipes and clogged drains.

All sorts of means of softening hard water have been tried, mechanical, chemical and sleight of hand. But the only adequate means is one that completely rids the water of those substances which make it hard. One of the most effective known is the zeolite softener, in which the hard water entering the house passes thru a specially prepared bed of material (zeolite mineral) which removes bodily every vestige of hardness. Such a unit, installed in the basement, guarantees the softness of every drop used in the house.

By washing, bathing, cleaning and cooking with this completely softened water, you actually save money—enough to pay for the unit in a comparatively short time. And we hazard the guess that the family will be much happier for having to endure no more that embarrassing question "Now who left that ring in the bathtub?"

Bugle Calls

By Zeb Potter

Propaganda—what is it? We read of the minister of propaganda. In the press are warnings about propaganda, look out! In Boston, recently a college professor told students of his notion of propaganda: "The expression of opinions and actions by one group in an effort to influence the opinions and actions of others."

Well all of us throw out a little propaganda now and then to get the other fellow to do something for us. So don't get excited and jump out of the third story window if you fear the propaganda boys are after you.

Pa is comfortably seated by the kitchen stove. His slippers are on his feet and the pipe is glowing cheerfully from his long pulls. "Pa, go out and fetch me a pail of water quick," Ma speaking. "Now listen, Ma, that fresh lemon pie, the steak, and the home made bread of yours, has made me so comfortable. Let me fetch that water for you the first thing tomorrow morning."

Pa focused his pleading eyes on Ma. "You know Ma it's cold out. My rheumatism 'ain't so good."

This is propaganda. Just the common garden variety, soft soap to you. I ask you if it were taken out of our lives completely, I'm afraid that life would be chill and drab, just facing the hard cold facts.

Propaganda has its limitations. When it tries to white wash murder, persecution, and wholesale butchery of helpless humans it is wrong. Today in dictator ruled Europe it is a murderous device in the hands of men with the minds of ferrets and the hearts of wolves.

The professor in Boston sketched our minds into the picture of propaganda which he painted for the students seated before him. "Our minds are like camera films upon which all propaganda is focused. The mind is conditioned (trained) to accept certain facts and reject others. The way we are brought up makes a great difference in the way we accept propaganda."

It seems to me that our best defense against propaganda is not to have that camera type of mind. An X-ray mind, a mentality that analyzes, that puts the question mark on ideas, that's the type of mind to have when there is an epidemic of propaganda in the air.

"Zeb", a fellow asked me last week, "why do you persist in closing your column with, 'that's all this week?' You should sign off with that's enough this week."

—Zeb Potter.

Small Farmer Is Remembered In '39 Farm Program

Farmers who operate small farms will find that the 1939 AAA farm program has been drafted to provide as much flexibility as possible, according to Bryan Gaskill, chairman of the Will County agricultural conservation committee.

These provisions apply mainly to farms with small acreages of wheat and corn and in areas where there is need for more food and feed crops for home use.

Farmers who have corn acreage allotments of less than eight acres may elect to have their farms classified as non-allotment farms. On such farms corn will be treated as a general soil-depleting crop for the purpose of payment, and deductions for exceeding the corn acreage allotment will not be made unless the acreage of corn exceeds eight acres, Mr. Gaskill said. Similar provisions will apply for wheat. Furthermore, as much as three acres of commercial vegetables may be grown on any non-allotment farm without deductions.

Where the total soil-depleting allotment, excluding cotton, is less than 20 acres, the farms may be considered as non-general allotment farms in which case all the payment will be earned by following soil-building practices rather than by planting within the allotment.

(NOTE: Farm Advisers in Jefferson, Franklin, and Williamson counties will use this paragraph instead of the one above.) However, farms may grow as much as 20 acres of food and feed crops without deductions.

The 1939 program provides for encouraging soil conservation, for a level of agricultural production that will meet the country's domestic requirements and all possible export markets and for adequate reserves.

These objectives are to be accomplished through national acreage goals and acreage allotments for individual crops or groups of crops and by conserving the soil of the cropland not used for growing commercial crops.

Shortly after the holidays, community meetings will be scheduled at which individual farmers will have an opportunity to become acquainted with details of the program.

Churches Owe Duty to Aged Dr. W. A. Maier Says

The churches must pay more attention to the problems of the aged in our country, Dr. Walter A. Maier of Concordia Seminary declared today in his coast to coast Lutheran Hour broadcast over a network of 63 stations. Asserting that eight million people in this country are 65 years old and over and that this number is constantly being enlarged he appealed for increased attention to the spiritual needs of the "too old", suggesting that the churches leave the pension plans to the government, but prepare their parishoners for heaven. "Our public libraries have shelves of books on how to live long, how to live happily, how to live alone, how to live with others, but above all our age needs the one Book that teaches men how to live for heaven and its blessings." Dr. Maier said pastors of many prominent churches who answered a questionnaire on heaven expressed doubt concerning the truth of the biblical statements on eternity. He characterized this denial of heaven's blessing as "pulling the crutches" from beneath a crippled world. "For the injustice, falsehood and sorrows of the life on this earth," Dr. Maier added, "we must assure ourselves of the justice, truth and blessing in eternity."

Calling for a "heaven-minded" policy in the pulpits of America, Dr. Maier advocated the preaching of the gospel of Jesus Christ as the only means to establish and maintain faith in the heaven to come, declaring "only with hearts and minds directed heavenward thru Christ, can we find the new and rich happiness of the eternal life."

British Empire, Beset by Woes, Faces Battle to Retain Position

Five Trouble Spots Draw London's Attention in Desperate Effort to Appease Dictators and Still Maintain World Supremacy

By JOSEPH W. LABINE

Every world empire in history has eventually been threatened by disintegration. It happened to Alexander the Great, to Rome and to Spain. Today it is happening to Great Britain.

Obviously any alliance of world powers like that of Germany, Italy and Japan must run smack-bang into conflict with the far-flung British Empire, whose tentacles reach from London into every cranny of the globe. Such is the case in China, Africa and Palestine.

Moreover the United Kingdom now hears demands for independence from her colonies, who no longer cringe in fear of the shaggy lion. Once vassal-like possessions have grown up and learned to assert themselves. Two examples are Eire, which has already won a large measure of freedom, and India, the world's No. 1 problem child.

This Twentieth century territorial octopus springs from a seafaring mother country, whose sons went forth to trade and came home with an amazing empire. Mostly they acquired it not by aggression, but by just happening to be handy when it fell into their hands.

Importance of Navy Wanes.

The United Kingdom is held together by no stronger a cohesive force than some 3,000 commercial ships and the world's largest navy, but this has been enough to make Great Britain a referee of international affairs. In such a position she has sometimes been strong and aggressive, but her star may now be dimming. Since 1933 she has suffered a steady series of diplomatic defeats to appease Germany, Italy and Japan, rather than face the stark realities of the situation and stand her ground firmly. This is the traditional British way of doing things, a trait personified by Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain.

The United Kingdom now faces trouble at five vital spots. None is more important than Hongkong, which for 90 years has been the base of Britain's economic operations in the Far East. During that period one-fourth of all China's foreign trade found inlet and outlet through the tiny island port which lies a scant 30 miles from Chinese Canton. From here to the interior runs the Canton-Kowloon railroad, jointly owned by the British and Chinese.

Started With Manchukuo.

Britain's economic grip on China was first threatened in 1931 when Japan began her two-year battle to capture Manchukuo. In 1936 the danger became more acute when Japan turned to Shanghai, for years the base of British trade in northern China. Though the tremendously important Yangtze river was subsequently closed, Britain's trade remained substantially safe until a few weeks ago when Japan suddenly captured Canton and severed the Canton-Kowloon railroad.

Although Hongkong has been made impregnable against possible Japanese invasion, these precautions seem pointless in view of the city's death as a trading center.

Deprived of its rail connection to interior China, and with Chinese merchants intent on boycotting Japanese-owned Canton, Hongkong bids fair to become a ghost city.

African Colonies Important.

Britain's second trouble zone is Africa, where Germany demands return of the colonies mandated to the United Kingdom following the World war. These include Tanganyika, British Cameroons and British Togoland, all held directly by London, and Southwest Africa, mandated to the British Union of South Africa.

Economically, most of these colonies are useless to the empire but their strategic value is something else. Tanganyika gave Britain a connecting link between East Africa and South Africa, across which she hopes some day to build a Cape to Cairo railroad. Moreover, the British realize that Germany could use the war-lost colonies as naval and air bases, and that African possessions would give the Reich an excuse for building up her navy. This is a danger London is anxious to avoid.

The most likely trouble spot is Southwest Africa, which alone of the one-time German possessions is desirable for colonization.

Moslems Unite.

Palestine, the third problem, is a battleground for Arabs and Jews. Its modern history goes back to the World war, when Britain enlisted Arab support against Turkey, promising the Moslems control over Palestine as payment. But after the war, when Britain won a mandate over Palestine, she established part of the Holy Land as a national home for world Jewry.

The resultant battle between Hebrews and Arabs has been bitter and has placed London in an uncomfortable position. First, by supporting the Jewish cause, she faces conflict with Jew-hating Germany and Italy, both of which are now trying to make their nations 100 per cent "Aryan." Moreover, Britain's forced hostility toward the Arabs is fomenting a nationalistic feeling in the Moslem world.

As a ruler of Moslems in Palestine and elsewhere, Britain is thereby cutting her own throat. But her primary interest in Palestine is not Arabs or Jews but rather the Holy Land's strategic importance as a connecting link between her empires to the west and the east. It lies along vital air and sea routes which she must preserve.

Indian Question Unsolved.

Trouble spot No. 4 is India, little mentioned in today's headlines because nationalistic outbreaks are all too commonplace in this richest of all lands. India offers the United Kingdom no immediate threat to her empire security, yet it is an ugly sore that adds to the whole of London's embarrassment.

India contains one-fifth of the world's population, represents every religious and political creed, and is a mixture of at least 20 races that speak some 220 languages and dialects. It is obviously impossible to satisfy such a people, nor is the new "home rule" constitution a very far-reaching attempt to satisfy them. Under it, all real power is vested in British provincial governors who can veto what few actions the legislatures are empowered to take. Moreover they rule by decrees when legislatures are not sitting and can disband the sessions at will.

Although Mahatma Gandhi is no longer a leading force in Indian nationalization agitation, he has been succeeded by an equally strong chief, Jawaharlal Nehru, who is leading the battle to have the constitution abolished. Difficult though Britain's position may be, it is to be deplored that she has not made a more aggressive attempt to make peace in India. This responsibility is especially incumbent in view of the pot of gold that the empire has discovered in India. Since 1600 Britons have waxed rich in the Indian trade. Today the country is England's best customer, buying one-tenth of all her manufactured exports. Out of each dollar in revenue collected by the Indian government, 27 cents is spent in England, although England contributes less than 2 cents.

Eire Seeks Plebiscite.

The final trouble spot is Eire, just across the Irish channel from England proper. At the end of this year Great Britain will lose its last shred of control over the largest part of Ireland, which has an area about the size of Massachusetts and New Hampshire. Under Eamon de Valera, the southern portion of the island has waged a successful battle for nationalization and is now attempting to increase its sway by taking possession of Ulster. This latest development follows Mr. Chamberlain's pronouncement in favor of "self-determination" for European minorities. He was immediately pounced upon by Mr. De Valera, who said that self-determination should also hold good for Ireland.

If he has his way, Mr. De Valera will conduct a plebiscite in Ulster. Four of the six counties, almost entirely Protestant, will probably vote to join with Catholic Eire, the once-pronounced religious difference being forgotten under pressure of Eire's economic grasp on the island.

Such is the string of Great Britain's troubles and liabilities across the empire on which, it was once boasted, the sun never sets. If Mr. Chamberlain's policy of dictator appeasement is continued, observers believed these liabilities will indeed be lessened, that the empire will begin a steady process of internal decay in which one collapse will follow another. Offsetting this fear is the growing English opinion against Chamberlain conservatism, a movement which found expression last year in the anti-dictator policy of Anthony Eden, former secretary of state for foreign affairs. Mr. Eden is back in private life now, but repercussions against Mr. Chamberlain's "peace" of Munich are mounting every week and many Englishmen see hope for a new government with a stronger chin.

So-called yardstick becomes a straw man in joint senate-house investigation of TVA . . . How government can sell electricity cheaper than private concerns explained . . . Appointments present tough problem to President.

WASHINGTON.—One of the most extraordinary developments in the memory of the oldest inhabitants is what the joint senate-house committee investigating the Tennessee Valley Authority is doing with regard to the so-called yardstick.

The point is that the committee has heard testimony for days running about the yardstick. Experts for the utilities have occupied days of the committee's time attacking the concept, seeking to prove that it is unfair, that it has no relation to what it is really supposed to be. The committee counsel, Francis Biddle, has spent endless effort trying to knock down the contentions of these experts, with some assistance from several of the Democratic members of the committee.

Which would be all right except for one little thing. What is happening is that a straw man has been erected, and everybody is acting as though he were real. The experts for the utilities are attacking the straw man and trying to knock him over. Biddle and the Democrats are also acting as though the straw man were the sacred ark of the covenant and trying to prevent a single dent or singe.

What is this straw man? It is the concept of the TVA yardstick that the public in general, and congress in particular, held up to last summer. It was the idea that the TVA was going to determine, by actual operation, what electric rates should be, what prices would be fair, and what prices extortionate. This yardstick was to be held up to the country, with the general idea that the public would then know whether, in any particular community, it was being treated fairly by its utility company.

But that concept was thrown to the winds last summer at Knoxville by no less an authority than David E. Lilienthal, who is the most powerful of the two remaining Tennessee Valley Authority commissioners.

Tells How Government Can Undersell Private Firms

Lilienthal was on the stand before this same committee. He was asked by Rep. Charles A. Wolverton what it was that enabled a government operation to sell electricity more cheaply than a privately owned one.

Lilienthal frankly stated, with no hesitation at all, what these elements were. One was the government could borrow money for 2 per cent, whereas private capital had to pay much more. He pointed out that in the production of electricity from water power the chief element of cost is interest on the investment, the cost of the dam, the land for the reservoir, the dynamos, the power transmission lines, etc.

Another element which made government costs cheaper, he pointed out, was that when the government built a dam it could charge off a considerable fraction of the cost to flood control and navigation, whereas a private company had no way of being able to cash in on such benefits, even if they were admitted.

Still a third element, he admitted, was the difference in taxes. In some surprise, Sen. Harry H. Schwartz, one of the Democratic members of the committee, asked Lilienthal what, in view of what Lilienthal had just said, became of the yardstick. Lilienthal hesitated for a moment, and then asked the committee's permission to take some time in carefully writing out his answer. He would like to produce a definition of the yardstick, he said, which would be right, and could not be attacked.

Problem in Appointments Faces President Roosevelt

President Roosevelt faces a real problem on his approaching Supreme court and department of justice appointments. As a matter of fact the dilemma extends generally to recruiting for all New Deal officials, in such cases as appointments require confirmation by the senate before the officials can take office.

The senate is feeling its oats. It is returning from the country anti-C. I. O., anti-sit-down strikes, anti-Corcoran and Cohen, and, for the first time, not afraid of what the President might be able to do to punish recalcitrants.

So far as the attorney generalship is concerned, the President's problem is complicated by geography. His real choice for attorney general to succeed Homer S. Cummings is Robert H. Jackson. But Jackson is from New York state, and the Empire state already has three cabinet members—Henry Morgenthau Jr., James A. Farley and Miss Frances Perkins.

The once very imminent prospect that Farley would leave the cabinet has been almost eliminated. The Roosevelt "recession" nipped one very good chance for Big Jim to get out and make some money for his family. While waiting for something else to turn up Jim, through a ghost writer, put out his book, which netted him $75,000, according to reliable reports.

Now $75,000 is not much of a capital if a man contemplates retiring and living on the interest, but it is a nice piece of change if one has a regular job paying $15,000 a year.

So Jim's financial worries are over for the time being. He need not look around for a business job.

Morgenthau and Miss Perkins Love Their Work

The other two New Yorkers, Miss Perkins and Henry Morgenthau Jr. could not be pried loose from their jobs. In the first place, they love their work. In the second place, they love the glory of it, the social prestige, in fact everything about it. In the case of Morgenthau, Roosevelt would be genuinely sorry to lose him anyhow. The President does not regard Morgenthau as a Bernard M. Baruch, and he knows that "Henry" is stubbornly committed to a lot of ideas at wide variance from New Deal economics. But he knows also that no one could be more faithful to him than Morgenthau.

Miss Perkins is sometimes a worry to the President. She is doing better now, but for a time she could not have stirred up more trouble for the White House on Capitol Hill, if that had been her particular objective—simply because she rubbed the fur of senators and important representatives the wrong way. But Miss Perkins also is known for her utter loyalty, and she has the enthusiastic backing of Mrs. Roosevelt.

In addition, her leaving the cabinet would open up a real problem, unless the President were to appoint Edward F. McGrady, the only known person who could be appointed Secretary of Labor without starting something approaching a civil war between the A. F. of L. and C. I. O.

Not Easy to Find a Man Big Enough for the Job

New Dealers generally, admitting that the fact there are now three cabinet members from New York, which eliminates Robert H. Jackson as a serious contender for the attorney generalship, are predicting that Gov. Frank Murphy of Michigan will be appointed.

No one can be sure what the President will do, especially as it is not an easy task he has to pick out a man who will seem to the country big enough for the job, and yet be a militant New Dealer—especially as the department of justice is one place where it is extremely important, from the White House standpoint, to have a 100 per cent New Dealer. As a matter of fact, Homer S. Cummings had certain failings, from the New Deal standpoint, because every now and then he would have a conservative reaction.

So Murphy, once Jackson is passed over, would seem a "natural" for the attorney generalship.

But to appoint him would be to provoke a new White House versus senate battle, which would approach the Supreme court enlargement fight in bitterness and popular interest. Moreover, the President would be committing himself in advance, in this battle, to the side which, if one is to accept the political verdict on Capitol Hill, is unpopular.

It is generally agreed among politicians here that the biggest surprise of this year's primaries and elections was the reaction of the voters to C. I. O. and the sit-down strike. The first important manifestation was the Texas primary. It cropped out in various other primaries, but then the verdict became confused with the Ohio primary, where C. I. O.'s most hated governor, Martin L. Davey, was defeated.

Sit-Down Strike Victories Turned Into Defeats

The confusion was complicated by the fact that Gov. Charles H. Martin was defeated in Oregon, after a vigorous fight by C. I. O., and blasts by Secretary Harold L. Ickes. But the election changed the impression given by the Oregon and Ohio primaries. Sit-down strike political victories, as the primaries had been regarded, were turned into bitter defeats by the overwhelming triumph of the Republicans in these two gubernatorial battles.

This, added to the impressive failure of the C. I. O. to roll up big majorities in Detroit and Flint when Governor Murphy was being mowed down by the Michigan voters, drove most politicians to agree that Vice President John Nance Garner was everlastingly right when he denounced the sympathetic attitude of the administration towards sit-down strikes as bad politics.

Hurry, Pop! What's the Reason For All These Fake Whiskers?

Peggy Hopkins Joyce plays hostess to all the Santa Clauses in New York at a luncheon in the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria. Lucky no youngsters were around or there might have been trouble!

What will you answer this Christmas when starry-eyed Junior raises his face and asks:

"Daddy, how come I saw three Santa Clauses downtown today?"

Or:
"Mother, why was Santa Claus riding in an automobile today? Are his reindeer hurt?"

Or, looking at a newspaper:
"Why was Santa Claus so thin when I saw him on the corner today? He's fat in this picture!"

This is the season when harassed parents must think up quick answers or destroy Junior's faith in St. Nicholas. For Santa Claus, though a messenger of joy, can also be a pest. In Omaha a sympathetic mayor last year ruled that the army of fake Santas must leave the streets, thereby bringing sighs of relief from Mother and Dad.

But in other towns and cities, papa may restrain an impulse to strangle every red-suited gentleman he meets on the street. To prevent this mass liquidation, thoughtful persons have now offered a solution which has worked before and should work again. When Junior wonders about so many different kinds of Santas, the explanation is that they aren't Santas at all, but just his helpers. Simply wreath your face in a benevolent smile, take Junior on your knee and repeat the following:

"You see, Junior, Santa is a very busy man and he needs lots of help. So he has helpers who ask boys and girls what they want in their stockings."

The only trouble is that Junior may answer:

"Yeah, but papa, why did that man there say that he really was Santa Claus and that he'd be sure to bring me a big train set, and a lot of toy soldiers and a drum and a . . . ?"

Maybe the situation is hopeless!

Christmas Toys

KEENE, N. H.—This community is toyland each Christmas season as workers in the toy factories rush to put last-minute touches on miniature locomotives, automobiles—and even auto trailers!

American Turkey Has Foreign Name

You'll eat your turkey and like it this Christmas, but do you know where this festive bird got its name?

The turkey is the only species of poultry native to this country. Its name is attributed by some to its call notes, "turk-turk-turk"; others believe that its head ornaments, resembling the fez worn by natives of Turkey, gave rise to its name.

Another explanation is seen in the fact that the first turkeys from America were sold in Spain, largely by Hebrew merchants. Since the bird was frequently confused with the peacock, it is said that the Hebrew traders called it "tukki," their name for the peacock. With the widespread use of this name in English, it easily became the recent "turkey."

Christmas Celebration Dates Back to 354 A.D., Roman Records Show

The earliest celebration of the birth of Christ, December 25 of each year, took place in the Fourth century, and the custom spread from the western to the eastern church. Before that date the commemoration of Christ's nativity and baptism took place January 6.

First mention of Christmas is found in a Roman document known as the "Philocalian calendar," in the year 354, and the first English celebration of the festival was in 598, when St. Augustine baptized 10,000 converts.

In 567, the Council of Tours, France, declared a 12-day festival from Christmas to Epiphany, and later, from 991 to 1016, the laws of Ethelred ordained that all strife should cease at Christmas. In Germany, Christmas was established in 813 by the Synod of Mainz, and in Norway by King Hakon the Good, in 950.

His Last Dime

By Katherine Edelman

DAN DRISCOLL was broke. Well, almost broke. He had one thin dime, hiding in the dark depths of a purse that had once held bills of three figures.

He had held it for 20 years, ever since he had found it while ploughing on his father's farm. His lucky dime—that's what he had called it. Dan laughed grimly at the thought. Lucky! Had anyone ever been so unlucky as him? Here was the whole town preparing for Christmas, shopping, spending oodles of money, and he was a penniless, weary wanderer. A lucky dime!

A little place around the corner caught his eye. Dan entered, his nostrils quivering under the tantalizing odors. He looked around with greedy eyes, his mouth watering with longing. Soup, roast fowl, potatoes, luscious mince pie! But he mustn't think about such things. He had just one dime—the price of a cup of coffee and a doughnut, or a hamburger. Which would it be? The queer little man inside the counter waited while Dan weighed the important question. The hamburger won. While it was being cooked to order, Dan dug into his pocket and took the dime from the battered purse.

Hungry as he was, he handed it over before attacking the food. His voice was a bit apologetic. "It's an old timer," he said; "been in my pocket for years and years."

The old man didn't seem to be listening. He was peering through his spectacles at the coin.

"You're sure you're telling the truth about this dime?" he queried.

"The absolute truth," Dan answered. "But, if you won't believe me, you can have your coffee and hamburger."

A shrill laugh ran through the place. "It's a good thing you ran across someone who knew, and better, somebody who was honest," the little man was saying excitedly. "Do you know that you have one of the rarest dimes at large? It's—it's worth thousands."

"You mean, this thing I've held on to for years is worth money?"

"It's worth big money," the cafe owner was waving his hands in the air, the dime clasped between his thumb and first finger. "I've been looking for one of them all my life!"

"Hand me that menu!" Dan Driscoll cried commandingly. "I'm going to have a Christmas dinner right now. I'm going clear down the line, from soup to mince pie."

Hawaii Yule Greetings Broadcast to Islands In Pacific Territory

HONOLULU.—For the past three years Hawaii has broadcast Christmas greetings on December 24 to several lonely islands which have become potentially important along aviation's equatorial Pacific area. The messages, from station KGU, go out to the dozen or so young Americans who for three years have been keeping the Stars and Stripes flying on Howland, Baker, Jarvis and other tiny Pacific islands.

CHRIST'S NEW COMMANDMENT

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 5:43-48; 22:34-40; John 13:34, 35; 15:12-14.

GOLDEN TEXT—A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another.—John 13:34.

Lesson subjects and Scripture texts selected and copyrighted by International Council of Religious Education; used by permission.

The heart of all moral law is found in the Ten Commandments, but the very heart of the commandments is the "new commandment" of Christ, that we love God with our whole being and love our neighbors as ourselves. For if we have that perfect devotion to God we shall keep His commandments (John 15:9, 10), and shall show our love to our neighbors by positive acts of interest and devotion, as well as by refraining from falsehood, violence and impurity.

The message of our lesson today is one which will strike home to the hearts of honest and earnest men and women. When we stand in the revealing light of God's Holy Word we cry out for forgiveness for the manner in which we have failed truly to represent our Lord in the world, and in prayer for grace to live as we should. Let no unbeliever who reads these words use them as a basis for criticism of his Christian neighbor; but let him consider his own need of the regenerating and enabling grace of God.

Our outline for today we borrow with thanks from Points for Emphasis, by Dr. Hight C. Moore. It so aptly presents the truth that it merits our study.

I. Standard of the New Commandment (Matt. 5:43-48).

"Love your enemies" (v. 44), that is the standard which Christ has established for His followers. While the love one has for the brethren is without doubt a more intimate relationship than the love one may have for an enemy, we must not seek to minimize the real love we should have even for those who curse and revile us. It is to move us so deeply that we not only treat them kindly, but also pray for them. Humanly speaking such a thing is impossible, but in Christ it is not only possible, it has actually been demonstrated in life. It is so easy for Christians to speak with derision that borders on hatred about "the devil's gang," to lose all love for the crowd that hangs around the tavern and the gambling house. Let us hate their sin, but may God help us to show that we really love them.

II. Scope of the New Commandment (Matt. 22:34-40).

It is as high as God, as deep as the lowest sinner, and as wide as the circle of all mankind.

A man must be right with God if he is truly and fully to love his fellow men. To be right with Him does not mean a half-hearted one-day-a-week interest in religious matters, and that only up to the point where they do not interfere with our own interests and desires. To love God means to give Him the devotion of our entire being.

Loving one's neighbors does not just mean the man next door. Even that is none too easy at times; and some of us realize that we have failed even there. But the man in Sweden, China, Germany, anywhere on this earth, is our neighbor and needs our love. There are no "foreigners" in God's thinking about love; no poor or rich, no ignorant, no members of "another social order"—they are all our neighbors.

III. Spirit of the New Commandment (John 13:34, 35).

"As I have loved you"—that is the spirit that is to move us to love our neighbor. God is love, and it was always His will that men should love one another. But the new element in this commandment of Christ is that He, the final and perfect revelation of God's love, had come to give His life in loving service and sacrificial atonement. Paul caught the spirit of this commandment when he said, "The love of Christ constraineth us" (II Cor. 5:14). There is the real motive, the true spirit of Christian life and service.

IV. Sacrifice in the New Commandment (John 15:12-14).

Love draws no limiting line beyond which it will not go. Love says: "I count not my life dear if in giving it I may bring deliverance to my friends."

Some folk talk piously of their love for God, but are not willing to go even across the street to speak to a soul about Him. If we love Him we would willingly go to the ends of the earth for Him, or contentedly serve Him in what seems to be a forgotten corner. We shall not question His guidance nor blush to own His name, even though the testimony may mean our death. This we shall do for Christ's sake, and for the sake of a suffering humanity.

The writer thinks of John and Betty Stam whom he was privileged to teach in the classrooms of the Moody Bible Institute, and who not long afterward poured out their gallant young lives in martyrdom for Christ in China. "Greater love hath no man than this that a man lay down his life for his friends."

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Counsels Wise Eating During the Holiday Season

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

THE advent of the holiday season marks the beginning of one of the most difficult periods of the entire year for the homemaker.

To begin with, she is busied with the hundred and one details of Christmas shopping, the planning of holiday entertainments . . . and the preparation of extra food for parties. Secondly, the health and comfort of every member of the family depend to a considerable degree upon how they eat and what foods she serves during the weeks between now and January first.

Guard Against Lowered Resistance

Unfortunately, statistics show that the common cold and other similar ailments greatly increase in number directly after the first of the year. That is also the period when we find more people suffering from fatigue than at any other season. Both conditions are frequently traceable to faulty habits of eating and faulty hygiene during the holiday season.

The person who is forewarned is usually forearmed. Therefore, every homemaker who has the interests of her family at heart should plan, now, to arrange activities so that strain and fatigue will be reduced to a minimum. And more specifically, she should see to it that she formulates a sound eating program. Far too many people, at this season of the year, suffer the ill effects of lowered resistance brought about by unwise eating and by over-eating.

Overeating of a poorly chosen diet is inadvisable at any time because it tends to overburden the digestive system. But it is particularly undesirable during the winter season when almost everyone tends to stay too long indoors, frequently in overheated rooms, and to take too little outdoor exercise.

Regularity in eating a carefully balanced diet, containing sufficient bulky foods to help promote regular health habits, is of the utmost importance if resistance is to be maintained at a high peak during the holiday season.

Keeping Body Machinery Efficient

One should always remember that the body is a machine working as regularly and as accurately as a clock. Any good mechanic knows that a fine mechanism requires the same type of care day in and day out. Homemakers, too, should remember that the body does not function differently just because we celebrate a holiday with age-old customs. Thus, to keep every member of the family well and rested, try not to allow the holiday celebrations to upset the ordinary routine of your household.

Late breakfasts, heavy dinners, and suppers taken at odd hours do not constitute the best possible upon her to simplify the other meals in the day so that her children do not suffer when they eat a large holiday dinner.

Similarly, she should make it her responsibility to either prepare the special Christmas treats from ingredients which she knows to be pure and wholesome, or to purchase them from a reliable source. If these goodies are then given to children at the end of a well-balanced meal, and not indiscriminately between meals, there should not be the upset digestions that make Christmas a bugbear to some mothers instead of the joyous occasion it should be.

By following out these suggestions, you can help your family to enjoy the holidays without regret. You will feel fit and your good health will be the basis of good cheer.

menu-planning. The unfortunate over-emphasis on rich foods on special occasions may easily result in digestive disturbance, unless great care is taken to avoid dietetic indiscretions, and to maintain always the ideal of a balanced ration.

Child's Diet Especially Important

During the dark days of December, the children's diet requires extra thought and care. Too close confinement indoors and the lack of sunshine may easily have an adverse effect upon the temper and vitality of young children. Then, too, the excitement of anticipating Christmas is bound to add to their general fatigue.

Children seldom complain of fatigue, which makes it all the more necessary for mothers to be on guard against, or to look for, the first intimation that it may exist.

A child who is tired is very apt to be irritable. More than likely his appetite will be poor, and when he does eat, he may not be able to care properly for the food he takes. You may find, if you allow him to become overtired or feed him unaccustomed foods, that it will be a struggle to get him to bed, and even then he may not sleep soundly. And it is generally recognized that disturbed sleep, plus unwise eating, may have most unfortunate consequences.

The Ideal Holiday Diet

Holiday or no holiday, both children and adults should have at least two fruits daily, one of which should be a citrus fruit or tomatoes, to help provide adequate vitamin C; there should be two vegetables besides potatoes, one of which should be of the green, leafy variety; an egg daily, or at least three or four weekly; a quart of milk for every child, and a pint for each adult.

If your meals are built on this foundation, there will be less room for the rich heavy foods which should only be taken in moderation, and after you have helped to satisfy the appetite with the protective foods. By making a point of eating generously of fruits and vegetables, and by including a crisp raw salad in the daily diet, you will be much more apt to consume sufficient bulk or cellulose to help maintain regular health habits.

Christmas Confections

We can scarcely speak of the holiday diet, particularly where children are concerned, without saying a word about Christmas confections and other goodies. These are a part of the holiday tradition. No homemaker would wish to deprive her family of such pleasures, but it does devolve

Questions Answered

Mrs. S. M. B.—Your letter was the first of a large number I received on the subject and I am therefore answering you, though my reply is also directed to all the others who have inquired concerning a recent announcement that cereals might be harmful to the teeth.

I have seen reports on this subject by two investigators and I know that other investigators are now endeavoring to check their work. As soon as there is further progress to report, I shall be glad to comment.

In the meantime, I would not hesitate to follow the advice of leading nutritionists and give your children cereals, at least half of which may well be served in the whole grain form.

Given Time, the Lad Could Locate Her

The butcher boy was on his way to deliver an order when he was accosted by a lady who apparently was seeking someone in the neighborhood.

"Young man, can you please tell me which one of these houses Mrs. Smith lives in?" asked the stranger.

"Mrs. Smith?" said the youth, in reply, "let me see now. 'Taint pork chops, lean—for that's No. 3, over there, and it ain't two pounds of round steak and juicy—that's No. 142 round the corner. Hmm! Oh! it must be rib roast and tender, with a piece of suet, and hard to collect. Yep, that's Smith's. No. 9, right over there, ma'am, across the street."

And he hurried about his business.

A Visitor

Except for a living man there is nothing more wonderful than a book!—a message to us, perhaps, from the dead—from human souls whom we never saw, who lived perhaps thousands of miles away; and yet these, in those little sheets of paper, speak to us, comfort us, open their hearts to us as brothers.—Kingsley.

Woman's Club Holds Xmas Party

Mrs. Roy Hannum was hostess to the Christmas Party held by the Garden Department of the Tinley Park Women's Club Tuesday, December 13th.

The greeting on the door of an evergreen spray and silver bells, a symbol of holiday hospitality, welcomed the guests. Garlands of evergreens and silver bells were over the tops of the windows and down the sides of the door and on out into the next room, creating a rhythm which kept leading you on and there at the end hung a huge red stocking. The idea is, says Mrs. Crist, to have the theme run "All thru the House." Did you know that we have a National Christmas Tree? It's a giant sequoia in General Grant National Park, California. Scores of pilgrims trudge thru the snow each Christmas Day to sing carols at its 40-foot base.

Mrs. Chas. Crist read an interesting paper on Christmas Across a Nation. How it is celebrated from one end of the land to the other. The gay festivities and quaint customs are as interesting and varied as the many lands in which they were born.
